

What?

Security Clearance also applies to any business subcontract by the US military (any branch).

There are about 4.5 million people in the United States with secret and top clearance.

Military Service Members are expected to pay their financial obligations in a timely manner. If the client is behind on paying debts, they run the risk of losing their security clearance.

Why?

Factors that affect Security Clearance:

- Personal Conduct
- Drug and Alcohol History
- Criminal Activities
- Connections with Foreign countries
- Financial Situation

A client's Security Clearance Adjudicator will use the above in deciding whether to revoke Security Clearance.

Financial Situation is a high priority for the adjudicator because a client in debt is considered more open to bribes in exchange for secrets.

Adjudicators are always on the lookout for service members who are financially overextended.
